A Very Wicked Hoax. MOWING HOW THE BROOKLYN CLY ROY WERE VICTIMIZED ON ALL FOOLS' BAY. [From the Brooklyn fagle.]

Last Saturday was A.d. Fools' Day, as divers individuals in this city know to their cost, Among other " sells" perpetrated was one which for undegenerate "cussedness" carries off the palm. During the forenoon of the day the following note was received by forty different clergymen in the city: " Rev. Dr.

"Dear Sir, Please be at the Pierrepont House on Sa'urday, April 1, at 8 o'clock P. M., to perform the marriage ceremony between Louisa B. Campbell and Ferdinand L. Bristow. "I remain, sir, very respectfully,

. "F. L. BRISTOW." Now, the name signed to this note had a sort of golden sound. It resembled, as it were, the chie's of double eagles or the rustle of Treasery notes. "Bristow! Mayban he is the nephew or relative of the chief magnate of the Treasury." Such were the visions which flitted through the minds of numbers of the recipients of the note, as they put on a clean neckcloth and prepared themselves for the expected ceremony.

Half an hour before the time appointed two young men who have no regard for dignities nor respect fer persons stole quietly into the hotel and stationed themselves in the waiting-room adjoining the main entrance. Three o'cleck came, and as the hand upon the did pointed to the bour the front door opened, and in walked a stately, whitechokered gentleman, who proceeded to the desk and blandly inquired for "Mr. Bristow," at the same time exhibiting his note. The urbane elerk replied that there was no such gentleman stopping in the house, and the "cleric" depirted, greatly marvelling. He had barely left the door before another entered, with speculation in his eye; and he also departed with an expression upon his face which showed that he believed this world to be hollow and his doll stuffed with saw-dust. Rev. J. B. Fulton was among the first arrivals, but he saw the joke in an instant, and "lit out" with speed. Rev. Dr. Talmage and Reg. Dr. Storrs sent notes by telegraph boys to the effect that circumstances over which they had no control prevented them from attending. A note had been sent to Mr. Brecher, but the witty Plymouth pastor was too keen to be caught with such chaff, and gave no response. One absent-minded clergyman had forgotten his note and the name, and hunted through the register for some time in hopes of finding it. For over half an hour the flood-tide of ecclesiastical inquiry broke in bland murmurs around that devoted botel-clerk, until upwards of thirty members of the cloth bad inquired for "Mr. Bristow." As each one discovered the wicked device which bad lured him on, and felt his crisp and rustling hopes wither before the blast of adversity, he turned and departed with a swiftness which betokened a forgotten engagement or an unfinished ser mon, and with a lively sense of the total de pravity and utter wickedness of mankind. It was noticed yesterday that some of them prayed vindictively for the regeneration of the human race. And those unrepentant and grace-deserted young men gloried in their shame, and when all was over went out and comforted themselves with warming and nourishing fluids, composed of the juice of the corp, the rind of a lemon, and withal a little sugar.
